Important Alert for International Students on Money Muling Scams

As part of our commitment to your safety and well-being, we want to bring to your attention an important issue that has been affecting many international students: Money muling scams.

Money muling is a serious crime where individuals are tricked into transferring illegally obtained money on behalf of criminals. These activities are often disguised as legitimate job offers or requests for financial help, but participating in them can have severe legal consequences.

To help you stay informed and protected, we are promoting several resources developed by the Department of Education. These resources are available in 7 different languages to ensure you have access to the information you need:

Additionally, Austrac, Australia's anti-money laundering and counter-terrorism financing regulator, has also released a comprehensive guide specifically addressing the issue:

We strongly encourage you to read these resources and share them with your friends. Staying informed is the best way to protect yourself from becoming a victim of these scams.

Excursion Update: A Culinary Adventure at the Melbourne State Library

We are delighted to share the highlights of our recent student excursion to the Melbourne State Library. This trip uniquely blended culture and culinary inspiration, aligning perfectly with our mission to offer comprehensive learning beyond the classroom.

Our cookery students explored the Melbourne State Library's vast collection of culinary books and historical recipes, gaining new ideas and perspectives for their studies and future creations. They were particularly fascinated by the culinary archives showcasing the evolution of food and cooking techniques.

During the excursion, our students participated in interactive guided tours, where they explored the library's extensive collections and learned about its history and architecture. They were captivated by the Dome Reading Room, renowned for its stunning design and serene atmosphere, providing an ideal setting for studying and drawing inspiration. They learned how to efficiently utilize the library's resources, including digital databases and archives, to enhance their academic proficiency and culinary knowledge.

Here's what some of our cookery students had to say about the excursion. "Visiting the Melbourne State Library was an eye-opening experience. The history and the vast amount of culinary knowledge contained within its walls are truly inspiring," said Kulvir Singh. "The research workshop was incredibly helpful. I now feel more confident in using various resources for my assignments," shared Sobita Singh. "I loved the culinary book collection. It gave me so many new ideas to try out in my cooking," added Gurkirat Singh.

We are committed to providing our cookery students with more such enriching experiences. Excursions like these are a testament to our dedication to holistic education, fostering both academic and personal growth.
